Described by one linguistic scholar, King's 'I Have a Dream' speech was "not a legal brief on the intricacies of the civil rights movement in America, nor an intellectual treatise on the plight of black people." Rather, it was a "fervent emotional sermon, forged out of the language and spirit of democracy.

A study into Martin Luther King Jnr's “I have a dream” speech. An activity exploring the purpose of the speech, its relevance to today and an activity for children to illustrate their understanding of his speech. An extension activity I did after this was for children to write a speech inspired by “I had a dream”.
